Back To What?

The bureau of agricultural economics has con firmed a general impression that the population trend away from the farm is now running in reverse.

War veterans have been mainly responsible, with an assist from urban dwellers who looked for and fir ally found their "little place in the country."

But it is suspected that much more is going on in the replenishment of the farm population than a switch back to agriculture as a way of life. In every urban community in the nation, the desire to mov out into the country is a familiar condition—but rarely does it entail the pursuit of agriculture.

A very large portion of the refugees from urban living are no more than that—just refugees. They have turned to the country as a place to live, not to agri- itorious endeavor.
